The University of the Balearic Islands and the Natural History Society of the Balearic Islands is organising the eighth Environment Days (Jornades de Medi Ambient) which Formentera will host for the first time on 23 and 24 January. The Consell de Formentera collaborates in the event.

The conference starts at 9.30am, Monday 23 January, in Centre Antoni Tur 'Gabrielet' and will offer a space for researchers and naturalists from various fields to present their research and work around the Balearic Islands and the islands of Eivissa and Formentera in particular. In this way, naturalists can learn what work is being done in fields other than their own.

The Formentera Office of Environment encourages people to participate in the conference, which will highlight recent years' naturalistic findings and research, and disseminate these activities to the general public. The event will also be a springboard for experience exchanges and share insight into environmental issues.

20 January 2023
Communications Office
Consell de Formentera